Duke Energy Foundation small business incentive grants were awarded to 25 businesses in Lebanon and Turtlecreek Township by the Warren County Foundation on December 19.

WARREN COUNTY ENVIRONMENTAL FORUM

The Warren County Environmental Forum has had an active year. The goal of the Forum is to help the Warren County Community develop and grow funding that aims to establish environmentally conscious practices in business and on private lands. The Forum is accomplishing this through education and funding to inspire action. By helping mitigate climate change risks, biodiversity loss, and pollution, the Forum hopes to improve the economic, social, and environmental well-being of the entire County.

The Forum will engage the community in both the giving and decision-making process to support Warren County-based businesses and community members through grants. These grants will be approved by the Advisory Council and awarded to individuals or companies that submit a proposal demonstrating a positive environmental change or a conservation minded practice that establishes or enhances the environmental landscape of Warren County.

Examples of grant uses include, but are not limited to: Establishing a rain garden; converting business disposables to biodegradable products; establishing a composting system; implementing a recycling program; other environmental/conservation projects not listed above.

The most recent incentive grant was awarded to St. Zachary's Haven in Morrow to help construct a greenhouse to grow vegetables and fruits throughout the year to feed the residents. St. Zachary's Haven is a nonprofit, faith-based and sober living residential farm.

Incentive Grant from the Environmental Forum helped St. Zachary's Haven build as greenhouse.

URBAN CONSERVATION LEARNING LAB

Warren County Soil and Water Conservation District (Warren Co SWCD) and the Warren County Foundation have entered into a partnership to promote conservation best management practices with the establishment of the Urban Conservation Learning Lab (the Lab). This public education space will demonstrate simple, affordable conservation opportunities that Warren County residents can implement to help improve the stormwater quality, soil health, and pollinator populations. Phase I of the Lab entailed the installation of the rain garden, sponge garden, rain barrels, compost bins, and small pollinator house. Phase II will be composed of a patchwork permeable pavement walkway, large pollinator house, community art installation, and turf alternative display. The Lab will address the following pressing challenges:

Water Quality In most urban settings, approximately 55 percent of rainwater becomes surface runoff. This can negatively impact water quality as sediment and unseen pollutants, such as lawn fertilizers and chemicals, become free to move with urban runoff. Extensive surface runoff during and after high intensity rainfall events can increase the likelihood of local and downstream flooding. Conservation measures help to capture, infiltrate, and clean stormwater, reducing a property's contribution to water quality degradation, flashy stream flows, and localized flooding.

Loss of Pollinator Habitat Pollinating insects are among the most important to human populations and native biodiversity as they facilitate the vital process of pollination, either to perpetuate native plant species or produce many of the crops we rely on for food at the global scale. Pollinators are in decline for a variety of reasons including the loss of habitat. The Lab will be home to a variety of small best management practices that most homeowners could build and maintain regardless of their lawn size.

WARREN COUNTY FOUNDATION SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAMS

Scholarships are an incredible source of financial assistance for college students. Unlike loans, scholarship funds are free money usually earned by students based on need or achievement. That means you don't have to pay them back over time – an assurance that can vastly reduce financial stress and help you focus more academic studies. For the donor, the satisfaction of paying it forward and helping students achieve their dreams is powerful.

In 2023, the Warren County Foundation has helped to award 105 scholarships from 28 funds totaling more than $196,000. The scholarships are awarded in nine high schools across Warren County. Scholarship funds are established to honor and memorialize Individuals, families and groups, organizations and businesses, etc.

"Working with the Warren County Foundation to manage our local scholarship program is one of the best decisions we could have made. Setting up the fund was simple, and we have been impressed with the ease of awarding our first four scholarships through the Foundation this year. We are excited to be able to focus on growing the scholarship program now because we are confident that the Warren County Foundation is managing the administrative details for us."

WARREN COUNTY IMAGINATION LIBRARY UPDATE

The Warren County Imagination Library will be celebrating its fourth anniversary in the spring providing free, age-appropriate books to Warren County children from ages 0-5 every month. The theme of the program is "Every Child Reads Every Day." During the first three plus years through December 2023, we have served more than 14,700 children. More than 8,400 are active readers (60.6 percent) and 6,500 plus have turned five and graduated from the program going on to kindergarten.

The five Warren County Library Districts continue to support the program, providing funding to support the purchase of books. They include: Franklin-Springboro Public Library; Lebanon Public Library; Mary L. Cook Public Library; Mason Public Library; and Salem Township Public Library. The five libraries have signed a new Memorandum of Understanding to provide financial support in 2024 and 2025. The local funds coupled with matching funds from the Dolly Parton Imagination Library of Ohio pay for the free books mailed to children in Warren County. More than 300,000 books have been mailed to Warren County children from the Dolly Parton Imagination Library. Children can be registered at www.ohioimaginationlibrary.org.
